FOR NATIONAL DEFENSE—

The Technical Training Air Force

BY MAJ. GEN. EUGENE L. EUBANK
Commanding General
Technical Training Air Force

THE mission of the Technical Training Air Force is to provide indoctrination, officer candidate, and technical training for personnel of the Air Force. For the accomplishment of this mission, the Technical Training Air Force has 10 bases in addition to its Headquarters at Gulfport, Miss. Three of these are devoted to indoctrination training and seven to Technical Training. The distribution of the responsibilities and tasks to these bases is as follows:

Maj. Gen. Eubank

Lackland AFB at San Antonio, Tex., provides formal basic military training for male and female enlisted personnel and formal training leading to the original commission of non-rated male and female officers through the operation of an Officer Candidate School. In addition to these, Lackland has been charged with the conduct of the Officer Basic Military Course for officers who have been given a direct commission from civil life.

Parks AFB at Pleasanton, Calif., and Sampson AFB, Geneva, N. Y., provide formal basic military training for male enlisted personnel.

Amarillo AFB at Amarillo, Tex., conducts formal and special training courses in Jet Airplane and Engine Maintenance and Metal Working. Amarillo also is assigned the responsibility of operating the Air Force Retraining Center. Selected prisoners, eligible for retraining under the provisions of AFR 125-33, are assigned PCS to the 3320th Retraining Group. Here, they go through an intensive program of rehabilitation designed to study the individual trainee and return him to duty improved in attitude, conduct, military efficiency, and able to perform a useful service to the Air Force.

The well integrated training program encompasses education, military training, mental hygiene, individual and group psycho-therapy, specialized technical training, along with athletics, supervised recreation and religious instruction.

Chanute AFB at Rantoul, Ill., conducts formal and special training courses in Training Devices Maintenance, Intricate Equipment Maintenance, Aircraft Ac-

AF General Vacancies

Notwithstanding the temporary promotion of two officers to lieutenant general, 14 to major general and 31 to brigadier general, announced late last week, the Air Force still will be able to make additional general officer promotions under quotas set up under the restrictive Davis Amendment.

The new promotions raise to 346 the total number of general officers in the Air Force—seven generals, 19 lieutenant generals, 127 major generals and 193 brigadier generals.

The Davis Amendment permits the Air Force to have during the current fiscal year seven generals, 19 lieutenant generals, 161 major generals and 221 brigadier generals.

This means that the Air Force has at the present time vacancies for the advancement of 34 brigadier generals to major general and 28 colonels to brigadier general.

The following are the names of the officers given recess appointments last week, with their assignments indicated:

USMC Promotion Plans

Three important promotion-integration developments were recorded this week by the Marine Corps: the recently authorized temporary promotion policy was explained; plans were revealed to commission an additional 225 enlisted men in the rank of second lieutenant, and quotas were outlined for the remaining ranks to be integrated into the Regular Marine Corps.

Marine enlisted men who will be named for temporary appointment to the grade of second lieutenant will include 150 ground and 75 aviation applicants. All 225 are being selected from among candidates who made application under the temporary EM commissioning program which was halted abruptly last May. Although, General Lemuel C. Shepherd, jr., Marine Corps Commandant, has authorized the additional selections, Headquarters said "it is not anticipated that the program will be reopened."

The Marine Integration Board, now meeting under Maj. Gen. Walter W. Wensinger, has been authorized meanwhile to select 239 first lieutenants and 334 second lieutenants for integration. Forty-nine of the first lieutenants and 45 of the

Directive May Alter Personnel Policies

Department of Defense officials this week were giving close study to directives issued by Secretary of Defense Robert A. Lovett aimed at extending unification in the military supply system. From a personnel standpoint, Section I of Directive 4000.8, 5 Sept., is of particular significance.

"Within each military department," Mr. Lovett orders, "a definitive program will be established for the recruitment and training of competent military and civilian personnel to serve in the areas of procurement, production, warehousing and distribution of supplies and equipment and related supply management functions."

"Rotation, promotion and assignment policies within each military department," Mr. Lovett adds, "will be adapted to assure the most effective use of trained personnel within these areas."

The extent to which personnel policies of the various Services may be modified in view of this statement will not be known immediately, but some changes are likely as Secretary Lovett's directive is implemented.

During recent months, there has been considerable discussion concerning the problem of promotions for officers in supply system assignments.

There is a notable difference among the Services in this regard, in that the Navy has a separate Supply Corps whose officers are promoted from a special list. In the Army and Air Force, however, there are no such promotion lists; for example, Army Quartermaster officers are considered for promotion in identical manner as is used for Infantry officers. The Marine Corps has officers who are designated for supply duty only.

Secretary Lovett's comprehensive directives on procurement practices followed the passage by Congress in July of Section 638 of the 1953 Appropriations Bill, which states:

"Sec. 638. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of law and for the purpose of achieving an efficient, economical and practical operation of an integrated supply system designed to meet the needs of the military departments without duplicating or overlapping of either operations or functions, no officer or agency in or under the Department of Defense, after the effective date of this section, shall obligate any funds for procurement, production, warehousing distribution of supplies or equipment or related supply management functions, except in accordance with regulations issued by the Secretary of Defense.

"(b) This section shall be effective sixty days after the approval of this act."

Secretary Lovett's instructions establish fundamental principles and basic objectives in the field of supply management. These objectives are not self-executing, but will be progressively attained through a series of implementing directives setting forth specific pro-

Army Reports 536 Temporary Promotions; Releases Recommended List to Lt. Col.

The Army this week released the names of 536 officers (Page 35) promoted to the temporary ranks of captain (219), major (197), lieutenant colonel (79), and colonel (41), and at the same time released the complete list of eligibles on the recommended list for advancement to lieutenant colonel (Page 52).

The scheduled publication in next week's issue of THE JOURNAL of the recommended list to colonel will mark Army announcement of all those on current waiting lists. The recommended list to captain was published in the 30 Aug. issue and the list to major in last week's issue.

Also anticipated for release next week will be a second increment of temporary promotions to captain and major. Probability is that there will be about 250 advancements to captain and approximately 200 to major, the exact number subject to last-minute change.

It has been previously reported that the total number of temporary promotions this month will approximate the 1,082 advancements to captain, major, lieutenant colonel and colonel which were made last month.

The prediction still is being made that the complete list of eligibles for promotion to captain and major will be exhausted by the end of the year, although the likelihood is that the lists to lieutenant colonel and colonel will be carried over into 1953.

Here is the run-down on the promotions announced this week:

To Captain—Special Orders No. 178, 4 Sept., lists the advancement of 18 Regular Army, 179 Reserve and two National Guard officers on the Army Promotion List. Additionally, there were 20 promotions of Army Nurses, all Reserve officers. Cut-off date was 21 Nov. 1947.

To Major—Special Orders No. 179, 5 Sept., reports the advancement of 48 Regular Army, 147 Reserve and two National Guard officers. The cut-off date was 15 Sept. 1946.

To Lieutenant Colonel—Special Orders No. 180, 8 Sept., lists 31 Regular and 48 Reserve promotions. Cut-off date was 17 Oct. 1945.

To Colonel—Special Orders No. 182, 10 Sept., lists the promotion of 37 Regular and 4 Reserve officers.

Second Lt. Promotions

The Army has told commanders to exercise care to make certain that in recommending promotion of second lieutenants, those in a temporary status, such as assigned or attached to the student detachment of a service school or detachment of patients, will not be overlooked.

In case of those whose qualifications for promotion are not known sufficiently to justify a recommendation, says Circular 75, a report to that effect will be made without delay to The Adjutant General.

ROK Division Fights At Close Quarters To Regain Capitol Hill On Central Front

SAVAGE hand-to-hand fighting between Chinese Reds and the South Korean Capitol Division for several days on the central front provided the highlight of ground action in Korea this week. It consisted of a bitter struggle for the commanding eminence known as Capitol Hill, which was lost to the Communists last Saturday, 6 Sept., but was regained on Wednesday after almost continuous and intense combat, during which the Reds sustained more than 2,000 casualties.

In the air this week, American Sabre jets battled almost daily against aggressive MIG's, and rolled up an impressive score of victories, maintaining their ratio of more than eight enemy jets destroyed for every American plane lost in air combat. The heavy toll of enemy aircraft taken this month indicates that September may break all monthly records for the Korean war in the destruction of Red planes.

Allied bombers and fighter-bombers continued their destructive raids on enemy installations deep in Red territory. Among the targets this week was a Communist officers' training school in extreme Northwest Korea. The school had been heavily hit on a previous occasion, and the new attack interrupted repairs which were under way. Other Allied air attacks hit enemy supply centers, ammunition dumps, gun positions, rail lines, and front-line troops.

Interdiction strikes against coastal highways and rail trackage, and Red shore batteries were made by carrier-based Allied Naval and Marine planes. United Nations surface warships continued their routine patrol, blockade, and bombardment operations, firing at enemy lines of communications, port facilities, and gun emplacements, and furnishing floating artillery support for Allied ground troops, where the battle line is near the sea.

Land Front Active

The entire land front was much more active this week than for some time. Red attacks were made in all sectors, but were more pronounced in the vicinity of Bunker Hill in the west, Capitol Hill in the center, and Sandbag Castle in the mountainous terrain of the east. There was a great increase in Red artillery and mortar fire, most of which fell on or near Capitol Hill, and adjacent Finger Ridge, where the Communists first won and then lost dominant positions. The increase in artillery fire may be an indication that the enemy was able to build up stocks of ammunition at the front during the recent lull in the fighting, and during the period that heavy weather prevented Allied planes from interfering with supply movements.

General James A. Van Fleet, USA, Commanding the Eighth Army, said this week that the Reds now have more than a million men in Korea. Previous estimates have recently placed the Communist strength in Korea at more than 900,000, and somewhat less than a million. The general does not think that this increase in available military manpower necessarily indicates an early offensive by the enemy. He pointed out that in recent weeks the Allies have greatly strengthened their line across the Korean peninsula, and are in a position to prevent a major offensive by the Communists from gaining any significant success.

Current heavy fighting is largely of a local character, with the Reds apparently seeking to seize dominant hill positions to strengthen their defenses. It is not believed to be the herald of important general offensive operations.

Congressmen Praise Forces

A group of American Congressmen, who have been inspecting our troops in Korea, issued a statement this week praising the leadership, morale and efficiency of our forces. They said that, contrary to rumors which gained some currency in the United States, there were no serious shortages of ammunition at the front.

In the western sector of the land battle line this week, the principal action, as usual, was on the key ridge position known as Bunker Hill, where United States Marines successfully parried several Red attacks. Repeated assaults by Chinese Reds, up to two companies in strength, were beaten off by the Marines. At times the enemy troops, strongly supported by artillery, came within hand grenade range of Marine outposts.

Northeast of Bunker Hill other Allied advance positions were attacked by Reds, who were driven back after a stubborn hand-to-hand fight which lasted an hour and 45 minutes. Northwest of Korangpo Chinese soldiers surrounded a Marine outpost late Saturday night, but withdrew the following morning after receiving a withering fire from the surrounded unit.

On the central front, the action during most of the week centered on Capitol Hill, west of the Pukhan River, and on nearby Finger Ridge. Chinese shock troops attacked Capitol Hill in force on Saturday, 6 Sept., and succeeded in driving elements of the South Korean Capitol Division from the crest. The South Koreans counter-attacked, and the resultant see-saw battle continued for five days, with enemy and Allied troops alternately in possession of the summit, though much of the time it was no-man's land, while it was being saturated with artillery fire from both sides.

Hand-to-Hand Combat

During the fierce fighting, opposing units were locked in hand-to-hand combat much of the time, using small arms, hand grenades, bayonets, knives and even clubs and fists. The enemy was supported by tanks, and extremely heavy mortar and artillery fire. Fire of massed United Nations artillery was concentrated on the crest of Capitol Hill while it was in possession of the Reds, and resulted in very heavy casualties. It is estimated that during the five-day battle the enemy lost about 2,300 in killed and wounded. No announcement was made of Allied losses.

Five counter-attacks by the South Koreans in efforts to regain the summit of Capitol Hill were only partially successful, as initially they were able to gain brief, temporary footholds, from which they were repeatedly forced back by the Reds. However, the Capitol Division soldiers clung stubbornly to positions only 50 yards down the slope from the crest, and finally on Wednesday, 10 Sept., they made a strong bayonet assault, which successfully cleared the hill. The victors dug in quickly on the summit, and repulsed repeated heavy counterattacks by the Communists.

The success of the troops of the Republic of Korea in this action demonstrates the improved fighting qualities and the high morale of the South Koreans, who have been reorganized and intensively trained for their role in defense of their homeland. They have proved that they are at least the equal of the best of the Chinese Communist shock troops.

Sandbag Castle Fight

On the eastern front troops of the United States 25th Division, at a point called Sandbag Castle, east of the Satae Valley, beat back an enemy attack after a sharp hand-to-hand fight. In the fighting in this locality there were several brief engagements throughout one night, and part of the following day, during which the Reds employed heavy artillery fire. Finally the enemy was forced to withdraw. Another attack on elements of the 25th Division near the Punch Bowl was readily repulsed.

West of the Mundung Valley a small enemy unit probing an advance position was driven off after a 45-minute skirmish. Elsewhere in the mountains of the eastern front there were frequent indecisive patrol clashes.

Allied Naval craft operated along both coasts of North Korea in foggy weather throughout the week, while carrier-based planes hit targets from Kojo to Tanchon on the east coast, and enemy-held bridges and other installations in Western Korea.

On the eastern flank of the land battle line near Kojo, the U.S. Heavy Cruiser Helena and the Destroyers Walke and Tingey destroyed numerous bunkers, trenches and gun positions. Several buildings were also hit and an observation post was shelled. The U. S. Destroyers Vammen, Lewis, and Cunningham, and the Frigate Evansville fired on truck convoys passing through Wonsan after dark and on rail cars in marshalling yards. Results were unobserved. The Lewis, furnishing gunfire support for Allied minesweepers, set fire to a building and dispersed a truck convoy. The Vammen drove three sampans ashore.

Operating between Sangdo gap and Songjin the U.S. Destroyers Evans, Naifeh, and Armick, and the British Frigate Condamine fired on a train and a separate locomotive near Pyong. Several hits were claimed as 100 rounds of 5-inch shells were fired by the warships. Near Tanchon at midnight the Evans fired on another train, but was unable to stop its flight into a nearby tunnel. Red coastal gunners shelled the Evans, and shrapnel raked the destroyer's deck, but there were no casualties or damage.

On the west coast the British Cruiser Belfast and the U.S. Destroyer Radford fired on gun positions near Chodo. In the Haeju area the U.S. Destroyer Marsh and the U.S.S. PC-702 bombarded North Korean troop concentrations. The Canadian Destroyer Iroquois attacked gun positions in the Haeju approaches.

Dawn To Dusk Attacks

Navy planes from the U.S. Fast Carriers Princeton and Bon Homme Richard pounded the Wonsan, Hungnam, and Tanchon areas in continuous dawn-to-dusk attacks. Warehouses were demolished on the beach opposite Mavang-do. Rail cuts were made in the same vicinity. South of Wonsan other carrier jets rocketed a camouflaged supply dump, while Skyraiders damaged rail bridges and warehouses near Sinchang. Corsairs hit sampans and buildings in the Hungnam region.

Princeton and Bon Homme Richard pilots also flew close support missions for Allied ground troops, destroying bunkers and gun positions. Planes from the Princeton dove into a narrow valley to destroy a supply dump and a railway terminal. Stored munitions were fired with napalm, and rail cars, a bridge, and a coal loading tple were destroyed. Flak at some of the targets was heavy, but all planes returned safely to their ships.

Despite unfavorable weather, Marine planes from the U.S. Escort Carrier Sicily, in the Yellow Sea, hit targets in western Korea, and along the south bank of the Taedong River. They destroyed one village, housing 120 enemy troops, and laid 500-lb. bombs on a supply dump and gun positions. One bridge and several trucks were destroyed or damaged. Marine aircraft from the Sicily joined with surface warships in a co-ordinated attack on gun positions near Chodo.

Close Air Support

Land-based warplanes of the Far East Air Force carried out widespread attacks on enemy installations during the week, and also provided vital close air support for battling Allied ground troops, particularly at Capitol Hill, on the central front, where they knocked out a number of enemy guns, greatly reducing the volume of Red artillery fire.

In one of the most successful days of the war, American F-86 Sabre Jets last Tuesday destroyed seven enemy MIGs and damaged 12 others. In addition, there were unconfirmed claims of another enemy plane destroyed, one probably destroyed, and four more damaged. Previously during the week Sabres destroyed three enemy jets, probably destroyed one, and damaged four.

Tuesday's encounters occurred when the F-86s were flying protective cover for more than 80 fighter-bombers raiding a Red officers' military academy, at Sakchu deep in North Korean territory. The attack drew swarms of MIG-15s from Manchuria in an attempt to break up the strike. High-flying Sabres descended on the Red interceptors and scores of swirling dog fights ensued. The combats continued until the enemy planes returned to their Manchurian bases.

Red Headquarters Hit

American F-80 Shooting Stars, land-based Marine planes, and Australian Meteor jets attacked a big Red army headquarters, destroying at least 55 buildings, and damaging 20 others. Ten large fires and three secondary explosions were observed.

Other fighter-bombers battered Communist troop and supply positions along the front. Bunkers were blasted, guns were silenced, and buildings were set on fire.

American medium bombers made a night attack on an ammunition supply center at Sopo, 12 miles northeast of Pyongyang. Other Superforts used electronic techniques to drop high explosives on a large manufacturing and storage area in northeast Pyongyang. Crews reported only light flak. The medium bombers also attacked a marshalling

Navy Switches Crews Of Two Aircraft Carriers

Officers and men of two Navy aircraft carriers exchanged ships late last week at Bayonne, N. J., as the Navy prepared to move one of the vessels, the USS Shangri La, from the Atlantic Fleet to the West Coast for conversion work, and the other, the USS Antietam, from the Pacific Fleet to replace her.

To prevent large-scale movements of dependents from the East Coast to the West and from the West Coast to the East, the Navy ordered the transfer of all personnel with dependents from one ship to the other. As a result the Government was saved an estimated one and one-half million dollars which it would otherwise have had to spend to transport two sets of dependents and their household effects across country.

In all, some 1,000 enlisted men from each ship, and all but three officers on each vessel, were transferred. The total number amounted to about 90 per cent of the complements of both carriers.

The officers who remained on their respective vessels included two Supply Corps officers and one Engineer on each.

Plans for the exchange of personnel between the two ships were completed earlier this summer when it was announced that the Shangri La would be transferred to the West Coast for conversion. Originally the ship had been scheduled to enter the New York Naval Shipyard, but the conversion work had to be shifted to San Francisco when the decision was made to build a second Forrestal-class carrier in the New York shipyards. Consequently, the Antietam was ordered from the West Coast as a replacement.

Those who were instrumental in shaping the plan were Admiral Donald B. Duncan, Vice Chief of Naval Operations; Vice Adm. L. T. DuBose, Chief of Naval Personnel; Vice Adm. James Fife, jr., Deputy CNO for Operations; Rear Adm. Homer N. Wallin, Chief of the Bureau of Ships; Rear Adm. Stuart H. Ingersoll, Asst. CNO for Operations and Rear Adm. Robert E. Blick, jr., Asst. CNO for Air.

MSTS Rates Set

Copies of new MSTS passenger tariffs for "space available" travel show that the highest rate to be charged under the newly instituted plan will be $60 for a trip from the West Coast to the Far East.

Last week, THE JOURNAL reported that the Military Sea Transportation Service will begin charging higher fees for "space available" travel beginning 1 October. The new rates affect only retired personnel and their dependents, or active duty personnel who are not on orders and their dependents, traveling on a "space available" basis.

Children five years of age and under will be carried by MSTS without charge, it was pointed out this week.

Under the new plan, two separate rates have been established. One for officers and their dependents, which will be approximately 30 per cent of the applicable MSTS cabin rates; and the other for enlisted personnel and their dependents, which will be approximately 10 per cent of the applicable MSTS cabin rates.

In the past, MSTS has charged "space available" passengers only for subsistence. The new rates embrace all expenses incurred by passengers aboard ship, including subsistence charges.

The following list shows the cost of "space available" travel on MSTS vessels by: (A)—Retired officers and their dependents, or active duty officers not on orders and their dependents; and (B)—Retired enlisted men and their dependents, or active duty enlisted men not on orders and their dependents, from East Coast ports to:

Europe	Caribbean	Mediterranean
A—$50	A—$25	A—$50
B—$50	B—$10	B—$20

The cost of "space available" travel for the same categories of personnel from the West Coast to:

Alaska	Hawaii
A—$20	A—$25
B—$20	B—$10
Cent & So Pac	Far East
A—$45	A—$60
B—$20	B—$20

From Japan to Korea, the cost will be: A—$5; B—$2. From Japan or Korea to other Far East ports, it will be A—$5; B—$5.

Unification Appraised After Five Years; Four Secretaries Bring Many Changes

The Department of Defense next week will observe the fifth anniversary of its establishment. On 17 Sept. 1947 the late James Forrestal took the oath as the first Secretary of Defense. Since that time there have been three other occupants of the office.

With such frequent changes, the development of the new Department has been inevitably retarded, even though all four officials had previously held important Government posts directly related to National Defense. With each change in the head of the Department, there were necessarily numerous readjustments to meet the somewhat different policies of each incumbent. There was also a period of relative inaction during which the new Secretary had to familiarize himself with a mass of details concerning the current operation of an agency, which is not only a highly important Government establishment, but which is also the world's largest business enterprise.

Through its first five years, the Department of Defense experienced some rather severe growing pains, arising from inter-service friction, and from rather sharp Congressional criticism. Nevertheless, the progress toward greater unification of the Armed Forces under the Defense Department has been remarkable, and the new agency is firmly established as a permanent and an essential part of the National Government.

Mr. Forrestal's assumption of office five years ago followed the enactment on 26 July 1947 of the National Security Act, which created a unified Department of Defense. The law, itself, was a compromise of rather extreme views as to the nature of the new establishment. One element, represented largely by the Navy, favored a rather loose federation of the Army, Navy and Air Force, with the independence of each Service assured. Other views, more representative of the Army and Air Force, were that authority should be centralized in the new Department, and that operations of the three Military Services should be directed by the Secretary, through a single Chief of Staff.

Mr. Forrestal, who had previously served as Secretary of the Navy, directed a gradual unification, to be accomplished with as little disturbance as possible of the traditional functions of the three military departments. He was beset by many difficulties and misunderstandings, but sought continuously to resolve them by consultation and co-operation. Under his direction material, though gradual, progress was made toward greater unification. The heavy responsibilities of the office and his unrelenting devotion to duty seriously impaired the health of the new Secretary, and he died soon after resigning early in 1949.

Succeeding Mr. Forrestal was Mr. Louis A. Johnson, a dynamic and controversial figure, who was a former Assistant Secretary of War. He sought by rapid and direct action to hasten the process of evolution in the Department. Mr. Johnson aimed at drastic economies in military expenditures and he did not hesitate to make deep cuts in favorite projects of the Services, particularly the Navy. Among the results were a new inter-service feud, arising primarily from competition for the limited funds available from existing and proposed Congressional appropriations. Hospitals and Naval shore establishments were closed; work on a large new flush-deck carrier was halted; and drastic personnel reductions were made. A long Congressional investigation of inter-service quarrels was started.

In the midst of the economy moves the Korean War broke out and the Defense Department had to reverse its policies hastily and to expand greatly, instead of contracting. In the meantime the Department had been reorganized, largely along the lines recommended by the Hoover Commission, further strengthening the authority of the Secretary. The Joint Chiefs of Staff, representing the three Armed Services, were given a permanent Chairman, General of the Army Omar N. Bradley, who still occupies that position. Other changes were made to facilitate unification, and give more positive direction to the Secretary.

Soon after the Korean War began in 1950 General of the Army George C. Marshall was named Secretary of Defense, to succeed Mr. Johnson. He had previously served as Secretary of State, and as Army Chief of Staff. General Marshall brought with him as Deputy Secretary Mr. Robert A. Lovett, formerly Assistant Secretary of War for Air, and later Under Secretary of State.

Secretary Marshall was under great pressure from prominent and influential persons in public and private life to mobilize hastily all the military resources of the country, to prepare for a general war that many feared was inevitable. This pressure was firmly resisted and the new Secretary decided on a less precipitate course, and a more gradual program, taking the calculated risk that the Korean war would be localized, and that we would have time for an orderly strengthening of the National Defense.

This appraisal of the international situation proved accurate, and during the 26 months that have elapsed since the Korean conflict began the country has been able to rebuild its defenses, without seriously disrupting the national economy. Under the direction of Secretary Marshall and Mr. Lovett, who succeeded the general as Secretary a year ago, the base of military mobilization has been broadened, and industrial facilities have been developed, which will make possible a very rapid expansion of armament production in a national emergency. Warships, planes, tanks, and weapons of all types have been modernized, and a steady increase, both in war potential and industrial capacity, (Please turn to Page 53)

Brig. Gen. Named Div. C. G.

The possibility of some temporary promotions to general officer grades in the Army was foreseen this week with the announcement that a brigadier general has been named to command the 82d Airborne Division.

Maj. Gen. Charles D. W. Canham, who has commanded the 82d since February of this year, will be succeeded next month by Brig. Gen. Gerald J. Higgins, Chief of the Organization and Training Division in the Office of the Assistant Chief of Staff, G-3, since August 1951.

General Canham's new assignment is with Third Army Headquarters at Ft. McPherson, Ga.

Simultaneously, the Army announced that Brig. Gen. Halley G. Maddox, Chief of Staff of the Third Army since March 1951, will be assigned about 15 Oct. to the Office, Chief of Army Field Forces, Ft. Monroe, Va.

Texas District Chief

Col. Marcus E. Jones, veteran Armorer who recently returned from duty with the U. S. Military Advisory Group to the Philippine Government, has been assigned as Chief of the Texas Military District in Austin.

Colonel Jones will direct the training and administration of the more than 30,000 Army reservists in Texas. In addition, he will exercise general supervision of the 59 ROTC units in high schools and colleges of the state. This is not his first duty assignment with civilian component. Prior to World War II, he was professor of military science and tactics at the New Mexico Military Institute.

UNITED STATES ARMY

Expand White Sands

Operational control of Navy and Air Force facilities in the area of White Sands Proving Ground at Las Cruces, New Mexico, guided missile center for Army Ordnance since 1945, has been placed under the Department of the Army.

White Sands Proving Ground now will include the Air Force's Alamogordo bombing range, thus becoming the country's largest land-firing range for guided missiles. It covers an area about 40 miles by 90 miles.

Concentration of this activity is expected to result in closer coordination among the military services in guided missile research and testing projects, particularly in the firing phase. The move is also designed to increase efficiency and bring about economies, the Department of Defense said.

The Proving Ground will be under command of Brig. Gen. George C. Eddy, USA. Capt. T. D. Quirk, USN, will represent the Navy as deputy to General Eddy. An Air Force deputy has not yet been designated.

Eighth Army Deputy G-1

Col. Roy N. Walker, former chief of assignments for the Judge Advocate General's Corps, has been assigned as Eighth Army Deputy Chief of Personnel. During World War II, he was chief of personnel for the 42d Infantry Division in Europe.

Keep up with your friends by reading the Army Navy Air Force Journal each week.

The Army this week released official regulations which authorize wearing of distinctive uniform items by Infantry soldiers beginning 1 Oct.

The distinctive items have been designed, it is stated in Changes No. 4 to SR 600-60-1, "to enhance the prestige of the Infantry soldier and to identify the combat ready Infantry units of the active Army."

All of the items, except the service cap insignia disk, will be issued without cost to the individual. The Army said unit funds may be used to purchase the insignia disk for the service cap.

The following is the text of Section VI, which has been added to SR 600-60-1, 26 Oct. 1951.

New RCA Victor record changer —easiest to play at all three speeds!

THE CENTER IS THE SECRET:

Just slip on the large center spindle to play "45" records automatically. Slip it off, and play records at other speeds.

Permanent spindle and changer play stacks of 33 $\frac{1}{3}$ or 78 rpm records automatically.

A flick of the finger and you have the right needle to play 45, 33 $\frac{1}{3}$, or 78 rpm records.

Fingertip control of speeds (78, 33 $\frac{1}{3}$, 45) and one control for On, Off, or Reject.

World's simplest 3-speed changer, this versatile "Victrola" combines new playing ease with the finest reproduction of sound. And it changes "45" records correctly, on the same turntable used for other speeds.

Key to this advance is RCA Victor's slip-on "45" spindle, which fits over the permanent spindle and locks in place. No plugs or extra gadgets. Simply stack your "45" records on this fine instrument, and play up to fourteen of them—in the order you select—at the twist of a knob. Then, when you wish, remove the "45" spindle, flick the needle and speed controls, and the same "Victrola" changer will play records automatically at 33 $\frac{1}{3}$ or 78 rpm.

More than a year of research and engineering went into developing this versatile changer—further evidence of the leadership which always assures you finer quality and performance in any product or service of RCA and RCA Victor.

Marine MOP Information

The Marine Corps announced this week that Marines on active duty who do not have Report of Separation DD Form 214 "will submit applications for mustering out payment to the Commandant of the Marine Corps, Code DGK, with a statement as to loss or non-receipt of DD Form 214."

Upon receipt of the application, Marine Headquarters will make certified copies of the form and accomplish payment of MOP. Headquarters pointed out that "Since reproduction of DD Form 214 will result in an administrative delay a diligent search should be made before making such application."

The applications should contain full name, service number, address to which check is to be mailed, and the following statement: "I am on active duty and have (have not) served outside the Continental limits of the United States or in Alaska after 26 June 1950. I have not made and will not make any other application for mustering out payment authorized by the Act of 16 July 1952." If there has been service outside the Continental U. S. or Alaska since 26 June 1950, the date of arrival in the United States will also be stated.

The Marine Corps said it will not pay MOP to personnel on basis of discharge from another Service.

THANK YOU "DENY"

We have known you, Deny Hartnett, thru all these 45 years of splendidly rendered service to the local telephone companies and to their patrons.

For our personal use you have installed business and residential telephones and extensions, have replaced service wiring, changed phones, added, repaired and replaced needed parts. Through all these 45 years you have expressed no words of irritation or criticism. Your after-service words "It's all right now, Mr. Crandall" has left a glow of cheerfulness.

In fact, your accented, booming, happy tone of big-hearted, courteous, good nature has been of great value to us, to your telephone company, and to thousands of individuals through the years.

If, as we believe, "real friends and their appreciation makes one rich" then we know of no one who is wealthier than you, Deny.

The wires you have kept pulling for us for the last 45 years have helped us to "change the address of thousands."

We thank you, Deny Hartnett, and may future joy and comfort "ring you up" for many healthy years to come and your priceless laugh continue to echo happiness.

Cordially,

DENIS HARTNETT WAS "MR. TELEPHONE" TO THOUSANDS OF PEOPLE IN THE TOWN

There was many a word of praise and affection for Denis Hartnett when he retired in Homer, N. Y.

In fact, a local businessman walked into the newspaper office and said he'd like to run an ad about him. "Good idea," they said. "Everybody around here knows Deny."

The advertisement is reproduced above — a tribute to forty-five years of faithful service.

The story of Deny Hartnett illustrates the local character of the telephone business.

For the telephone company isn't something far away but right on the main street . . . managed and operated by home-town people.

Their spirit of service makes them good neighbors and good citizens as well as good telephone men and women.

Air Surgeons Confer At Aviation Medicine School

Air Surgeons from more than a dozen commands gathered 9 Sept. at the School of Aviation Medicine, Randolph Field, Tex., for a four-day conference.

The Far East Air Force sent two officers to the meeting, Col. Max H. Watkins, director of medical administration, and Maj. William A. DeFries, chief of aviation medicine. The Alaska Air Command was represented by Col. Arthur H. Corliss and Maj. Verne Alder. Col. Carl B. Stilson and Capt. William K. Douglas spoke for the Northeast Air Command in Newfoundland.

Altogether, more than 50 visiting surgeons arrived by air for the conference. They were headed by Maj. Gen. Harry G. Armstrong, the Surgeon General, with a delegation of 12 assistants from Air Force headquarters.

Brig. Gen. Otis O. Benson, jr., commandant of the aeromedical school, welcomed the guests and introduced them at the opening sessions.

Among the other high-ranking medical officers present were Brig. Gens. Edward J. Kendrick, Earl Maxwell, and Olin F. McInay, all from Washington, and Brig. Gen. A. H. Schwichtenberg of the Air Defense Command.

Surgeons who participated in the discussions include, besides those mentioned, Col. Manah R. Halbouty, Robert E. Jarmon, William H. Lawton, Robert E. Lee, Nuel Pazdral, and Hartwin Schulze, all of the Air Training Command; Col. Loyd E. Griffin, Robert A. Patterson, and A. A. Townor of the Strategic Air Command; and Col. Nicholas F. Atria and Major S. White of the Tactical Air Command.

Others were Col. Arthur L. Streeter, Continental Air Command; Ralph E. Switzer, Directorate of Flight Safety Research; Oliver K. Niess, Inspector General's Office; Maurice B. Johnson, Military Air Transport Service; Walter A. Carlson, Air University; Dwight M.

Cheney Award to 'Copter Pilot

Lt. Gen. Robert W. Harper, USAF, Commanding General of the Air Training Command, acting on behalf of General Hoyt S. Vandenberg, USAF Chief of Staff, today, 13 Sept., will present the Cheney Award to Capt. Daniel J. Miller for heroism as the pilot of an Air Rescue Service helicopter in Korea.

The ceremonies at Williams AFB, Ariz., which will be in conjunction with the graduation of 100 jet pilots, will include an address by Col. Francis S. Gabreski, leading U. S. combat ace.

Other notables who will attend include Governor Howard Pyle of Arizona; Lt. Gen. Joseph M. Swing, USA, Commanding General, Sixth Army; Brig. Gen. Gabriel P. Disoway, USAF, Commanding General, Flying Training Air Force and Brig. Gen. Thomas J. DuBose, commanding officer of the Air Rescue Service.

The Cheney Award was established in memory of Lt. William H. Cheney, who crashed at Foggia, Italy, in 1928. It is an annual award for an act of valor, extreme fortitude or self sacrifice in humanitarian interest performed in aviation.

AF to Host Kids

As part of its increasing campaign to make youngsters' more aviation conscious, the Air Force will observe open house at many U. S., Alaskan and Hawaiian air bases on National Kids' Day, 27 Sept.

General Hoyt S. Vandenberg, USAF Chief of Staff, has told commanders that the Air Force has accepted the invitation of Kiwanis International and the National Kids' Day Foundation to participate in the observance.

Young, Air Proving Ground; and Benjamin A. Strickland, jr., commanding the School of Aviation Medicine branch at Gunter Air Force Base, Alabama.

Col. Don M. Flickinger, F. C. Kelly, and John M. Talbot represented the Air Research and Development Command with Col. Robert H. Blount of the Aero Medical Laboratory at Wright-Patterson AFB, Ohio. In the Surgeon General's party were Col. Joseph A. Baird, Fratis L. Duff, Adolph P. Gagge, Wayne O. Kester, William D. Preston, and Allen D. Smith.

Safest Year for SAC

The Strategic Air Command has completed the safest 12 months of flying in its history.

General Curtis E. LeMay, SAC's commanding general, said that SAC's aggressive year-long accident prevention campaign, the Flying Safety Year which ended 31 Aug., reduced the command's over-all accident rate from 35 to 20 accidents per 100,000 hours flown. On the basis of the accident rate of 35 which it had during the previous 12-month period, SAC could have expected an additional 105 accidents resulting in the loss of life by an estimated 103 crewmen.

Ramey AFB, Puerto Rico, won permanent possession of the Command's Flying Safety Year trophy and the "Safest-Base-of-the-Year" title on the basis of the combined aircraft accident rate for the flying safety year.

General LeMay will make a formal presentation of the trophy to Col. Alfred F. Kalberer, commander of Ramey's 55th Reconnaissance Wing.

The outstanding "Pilot of the Year" and "Crew of the Year" selected from nominations submitted by various SAC stations during the Flying Safety Year will be awarded certificates of commendation signed by General LeMay.

The marked reduction in accidents and considerable savings in materiel, personnel and dollars was accomplished despite a 40 per cent increase in the number of flying hours and mechanical complexities of flying new type aircraft. It was made during a difficult period of expansion and increased responsibility resulting from accelerated overseas deployment and rotation of SAC units.

In three of the Flying Safety Year's 12 months — November, February and June—SAC combat crews and maintenance men either set or equalled all-time flying safety records.

The keep the aircraft accident rate going down, SAC launched a new "Four Safe Months" campaign 1 Sept., designed to keep the accident rate down to 20 or below during the balance of 1952.

Latest figures compiled by the Air Force covering the first quarter of 1952 indicate that the Strategic Air Command topped all major Air Force commands in safe flying.

SAC's aircraft accident rate has declined steadily during the past three years. For achieving a record low rate in 1951, the command recently received a special award, the first of its kind ever presented to a command by the Air Force, for "Meritorious Achievement in Flight Safety."

Col. Frank W. Ellis directs SAC's Flying Safety activities.

Electronics to Replace Pilots, Gen. Eaker Says

The period between 1955 and 1960 will see the final development or last stage of the manned interceptor—complete instrument control during take off, in navigation, in fire control and in landing, according to a forecast made by General Ira C. Eaker, USAF-Ret., vice president of Hughes Aircraft, in an address to the recent meeting of the Air Force Association in Detroit.

"Today in air defense," General Eaker said, "we are still in the period of manned interceptors, but now complete radar fire control is available. The pilot still operates the plane, but he has now much more extensive aids. The big new step is that electronics is now actively competing with, and is at least a full partner to the pilot. The electronics sees for him, computes his course, and also controls his fire. We are in the middle of this phase lasting perhaps no more than five years."

"The next five year period, perhaps between 1955 and 1960 will see the next step in full measure. In this phase we have ground-to-air missiles for point defense, and the final development or last stage of the manned interceptor—complete instrument control during take off, in navigation, in fire control, and in landing; a complete mechanical equipment control even to the point of automatic selection of armament, including guided missiles. During this five year period, the pilot goes along almost for the ride. He still handles some functions, but he definitely is a human assistant for his electronic partner."

"Then comes the next period when the pilot stays at home. Ground-to-air missiles will replace the interceptor entirely."

"A similar situation exists in connection with the bombing of the enemy," General Eaker continued. "World War II and the present era finds the bomber still manned by its human crew, but with increasingly more precise and versatile aids in navigation and target location, and in bomb aiming. We are close to a new period in which the first unmanned guided missiles will replace the bomber in both strategic and tactical air operations. The Germans raised the curtain for a brief look at this period in the late stages of the last war with V-1 and V-2."

"This period will be followed by another which is not too many years away, characterized by unmanned surface-to-surface guided missiles which will have uncanny accuracy and present tremendous problems of interception because of their supersonic speeds and out-of-the-atmosphere trajectories."

Bomb. Wing Mission Change

The 44th Bombardment Wing (M) at Lake Charles AFB, La., has completed a successful combat replacement B-29 crew training program and has embarked upon a new mission to become a combat-ready medium bombardment wing.

The first crew began training 1 Oct. 1951. Since then the equivalent of five combat wings have been trained at the base.

"We will be at the business of defense for a long time, I fear, and no matter how long it takes, if you do the job at least once in full intensity, the knowledge acquired will yield astounding savings and improvements in efficiency. . . We must strengthen ourselves militarily if we are to succeed in our objective of preventing a third world war and building and keeping a lasting peace."—BERNARD BARUCH.

Proper Resistance. The top leaders of the Air Force, notably Secretary Thomas K. Finletter at a press conference this week, and General Hoyt S. Vandenberg at the recent Air Force Association convention in Detroit, properly have cautioned the Nation against the peril of freezing aircraft models in order to speed production. From many quarters, there are pressures directed not only at the Air Force, but at the other Services as well, to hold down on costly and time-consuming "gadgets" and "gimmicks" on planes, tanks and ships.

The men on the firing line can be heartened by the insistence of Pentagon officials on continued efforts to achieve maximum quality for all our armament. It must be conceded, of course, that some of the so-called "gadgets" and "gimmicks" will not perform up to expectations. But as Secretary Finletter points out so effectively we must not repress a venturesome spirit in order to prevent occasional failure.

That the United States must rely on quality production and performance is beyond question in the face of the manpower superiority of the Communist forces, their willingness to sacrifice living standards for huge military production. and—it must be recognized—their disquieting progress in the science of atomic warfare. In Secretary Finletter's words, "it is on quality that we must place our major effort."

The Armed Forces must be constantly on the alert to guard against those who advocate expediency in military production. While production is being increased, the acceleration is being achieved under careful controls. We are not trying to build the maximum number of planes, for example, but we are striving, and must continue to strive for the maximum quality. Whenever amateurs in armaments attack this goal, those whose lives are directly at stake and those who are charged with the nation's defenses must not resist, no matter temporary higher costs and lower production. To freeze design would be to freeze progress.

Physical Disability Pay. The Armed Services Committees of the next Congress should give early and careful consideration to the inequities in the present Career Compensation Act, particularly as they affect disability retirement benefits of officers wounded in action. Under the present law, those separated from active duty by reason of wounds receive only partial retirement pay, and if the disability is less than 30 per cent they receive only severance pay, unless their service is of sufficient length to warrant retirement. For any additional compensation, they must look to the Veterans Administration.

Many junior officers have been seriously wounded in Korea, but because they have relatively short service, their retirement pay on a percentage basis is often very small. Veterans of World Wars I and II, with comparable disabilities, were retired with three-quarters of their active duty base pay, and under the Career Compensation Act could elect to retain their retired pay under the old rates, or qualify under the new law at the new scales, whichever might prove more advantageous. Thus, in many cases those who retired for disability prior to the enactment of the new pay law are very much better off than those being currently retired.

At the time the Career Compensation Act was passed, this country was not engaged in any hostilities, and it is probable that the Hook Commission, which recommended the new pay scales, and the Congress which enacted the law had in mind normal peace time disabilities, rather than severe wounds received in action. Many of the junior officers whose names swell the Korean casualty lists entered the Service recently for a professional career. Their disabling wounds prevent their continuing this career, and in many in-

Waxes War on New Floors

Editor, THE JOURNAL:

The following is a situation that exists in at least one of the Army posts in this country:

Apparently recently it was decided that it would improve the appearance of the buildings if a chemical substance known locally as "oxychloride" were applied to the floors. This substance, which is a red paste, soon dries to a hard reddish slate-like substance. It must have cost the Army considerable money to install these oxychloride floors in the buildings of this reservation alone.

The floors look beautiful after waxing. But within a day they are in need of another waxing. At this reservation, they are being waxed approximately once a week. This means many man-hours are spent operating buffer machines, and applying wax.

At the present time everybody is complaining about economy, yet here is an example of the opposite taking place. Not only are people being employed to wax floors when they could be used elsewhere to better advantage, but there also must have been a high initial cost to install the floors plus a continual cost in supplying wax.

This Army and the armies of other nations have done very well for many years without the use of oxychloride floors. Why the sudden need? Couldn't the money be much better spent on a few more rifles and machine guns? And couldn't the men now waxing the floors be put to better use, such as handling a rifle?

ARMY CAPT.

Questions "Best Qualified Approach"

Editor, THE JOURNAL:

The letter by the personnel officer in the 30 Aug. issue was a masterpiece, but there are other gripes concerning the Air Force promotion system that deserve mention. The basic premise that eligibility for promotion should logically depend on the length of time in grade is ridiculous and certainly not even as just as using longevity as the criterion, which everyone agrees is not too good. Temporary promotion during World War II was largely a matter of being at the right place at the right time to fill T/O vacancies. Why should those who were fortunate enough to be in the right spots for promotion then, be given at this late date an advantage over those who weren't. Think of those poor prisoners of war who were captured before they got a promotion and remained POW's until the war ended at which time they got a single promotion. Also, why should those who were promoted to full colonel late in the war and got busted back in May 1946 be put at the top of the list for temporary promotion to full colonel five years after the war ended. It is difficult to see any relationship between being promoted in World War II and now.

However the most serious injustices have resulted from use of the "best qualified" criterion for promotion. Only God can pick the best qualified. Certainly a few men around a table studying a few effectiveness reports and letters of recommendations have very little chance to tell a good officer from a mediocre stances their severance pay and possible veterans' benefits or their partial retirement pay provide inadequate recompense for the service they have rendered in battle. Considering the fact that officers permanently maimed in other wars were retired at 75 per cent of their active duty pay, a much smaller compensation for those similarly disabled in the Korean conflict appears to be an unwarranted discrimination.

50 Years Ago—

The Secretary of the Navy has returned to Washington and entered once more upon his work of making radical changes in the duties of officers of the Navy, relieving those on shore duty and sending them to sea. One of the new schemes of the Secretary is to reduce the number of line officers on duty at the Naval Academy as instructors and substitute civilian instructors in their places. As we understand the matter, the Secretary will only employ civilians to teach in those branches which do not necessarily require a knowledge of nautical matters. The heads of the departments of physics and chemistry, mathematics, physiology and hygiene are now civilians.

85 Years Ago—

It is stated that the Artillery School of Practice is about to be re-established. The same reasons which render proper and necessary the establishment of a school for the companies of foot artillery will apply with greater force to the field batteries. They are maintained at an enormous expense, and unless kept up to the highest state of efficiency by constant and thorough instruction, they had better be dispensed with entirely. Some of them are now on Indian service, where they are about as useful as a ship of the line on wheels.

one and the lists of those already promoted have verified this contention in many instances. Effectiveness reports and letters of recommendation are not objective yardsticks to say the least—personalities are bound to enter. It is a fairly good rule that those who have no black marks on their records say very little and do even less. Are those the type the Air Force want to be the leaders? It would seem that more attention should be paid to accomplishments and less to little black marks which show up now and then in anyone who demonstrates mental and physical energy to a degree worth mentioning.

It is very unfortunate that promotions are not made on a "fully qualified" basis. Many less officers would be hurt and the morale (except for those relatively few who jumped over literally hundreds of their contemporaries) would be much higher than it is. If an officer does his job well by having done all that his superiors have expected of him why shouldn't he be promoted when his time comes? Everyone would like the perfect promotion system whereby geniuses or near geniuses can be picked out and given the opportunity to get ahead, but it is obvious the present system does not accomplish this and it is time the Air Force stopped kidding itself into thinking it will.

The "merit system" is wonderful theoretically but in practice we have seen it degenerate into the "buddy system" all too often. Let's use the system with the fewest evils, not the most.

Oregon Statesman—"Frame buildings have replaced tents for housing the truce conferences at Panmunjom. Since Korean winters are severe we hope they have provided central heating, for it looks like a long, hard winter for peace talks."

Albuquerque Journal—"The Senate sub-committee looking into aircraft production . . . charges general inefficiency, lack of co-ordination in the important task of strengthening our air arsenal. . . . The Senate committee also uses the word 'refusal' as applied to the working attitude of Government departments. This really carries a serious implication. It means that when policies and programs are adopted people in responsible positions who don't agree are refusing to help carry them out. This is an intolerable situation that must be corrected."

Florida Times Union—"The NATO maneuvers 'will put Russia on notice that the collective security effort in Western Europe has gone much farther than the planning stage. They will be a warning to the Kremlin that the Western world is putting realism into its preparations for a Soviet attack.'"

Gulfport (Miss.) Daily Herald—Commenting on charges of waste at the North African air base, the Herald says if the public had been kept regularly and adequately informed there wouldn't have been enough news left to warrant putting the story on page one. "Let's not forget for one minute whose Government this is. It belongs to the people and no one else. And every aspect of it—short of really top-secret military matters—should be on open display for all the people all the time."

Newark Evening News—"Responsibility for implementation (of the air safety report of the Doolittle Commission) has been divided among the Secretary of Defense, the Secretary of Commerce, the Postmaster General and the Chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Board. That doesn't seem a promising way to accomplish a task that needs, above all, co-ordination."

Baltimore Sun—"The Mutual Security Agency has projected a program for long-term recovery" for West Berlin. "The program will have to be a most unusual program, to fit a most unusual situation. Any successes will be limited, at best; but the idea is a right one. It is proper at this moment that the West should settle down in Berlin for the long, patient pull. It will be hard and bitter. It will not be unrewarding."

MAINBRACE Attracts Interest

ADMIRAL Lynde D. McCormick, Supreme Allied Commander Atlantic, departs this weekend, accompanied by his deputy, Vice-Admiral Sir William Andrewes, and a small group of staff officers, just in time for the opening phase of the long-awaited MAINBRACE exercise in the North Sea. That interest in this first large maneuver of nine-nation forces in the new Atlantic Command is not confined to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization was manifest as much as a week ago when an unprecedented number of Russian "fishing-trawlers" made their appearance in the announced maneuver area off the coasts of Norway and Denmark. Old Navy hands chuckled, remembering that in the days before World War II our Pacific fleet maneuvers always found an old familiar Japanese "fishing-trawler" industriously dragging its nets in waters where fish were highly unlikely to be in residence. Well, it is our argument, not Russia's, that the seas are free.

Without waiting for the maneuver to get under way, it is possible to anticipate the ultimate critique in one or two respects, for it is a foregone conclusion that, however sharp the progress in co-ordination of staff and command functions for nine nations, speaking half a dozen languages, the stage of attainment must be limited. Progress is not guaranteed solely by good will and hard work, for time is an important factor, and so is common familiarity with weapons which are still new and with the techniques required for their proper employment. That the best of teams still have something to learn by team-practice needs no argument, and some of the elements participating have had very little time for that practice, or even access to certain of the weapons and equipment which will be used during MAINBRACE.

A matter of profound interest of course is the extent to which the Navy will permit mention of little-known equipment. For there must still be great curiosity on the part of those observant Russian fishermen about the acceleration of planes' launching as well as their speed in air, and about the cruising formations at sea, and about the speed of the various surface elements, and the apparent responsiveness to signals, and the superlatives of electronic activities. The critiques which reach publication will not go into these details.

The exercise will do something to force needed popular attention to the prime point of the concept—that General Ridgway's very vulnerable Northern Sector needs much more defensive strength than is regularly at hand. That is the reason for the form which MAINBRACE takes: it is the Atlantic Command's response to a presumed call from SACEUR for assistance in repelling aggression in two parts of SACEUR's Northern Sector, the one in northern Norway and contiguous waters, the other in Denmark and the straits and southern tip of Norway.

Nobody has ever pretended that the land, sea and air forces resident in those regions could provide more than delaying action. MAINBRACE was designed (its planning began last November) on the reasonable estimate that Aggressor pressure in both areas would call for prompt assistance from the sea in the interest not alone of the Northern Sector but of the European Command in general. How swiftly support can be afforded, and in what strength, is interesting. How efficient has been the planning for such a contingency, how complete has been the training of individual NATO units for the mission required, how realistic has been the logistical preparation in particular, how readily have the new pieces of equipment been absorbed by the combat forces, how fully has the combined establishment made use of these enlarged resources—all these are the things of which the Atlantic Command itself must learn through the coming exercise. The training value itself is in a large sense the most important benefit from the exercise, but planning officers too have much to learn. And the participating powers must recall Admiral McCormick's reminder of last Spring, that for a true war his present resources would not at all suffice. That sober fact has not altered in the space of a few months.

The corps training activities of SACEUR's land forces are now under way in strength. In the U. S. Seventh Army, armored elements are working with special zest thanks to the recent replacement in most instances of the old Pershing tanks with the M-47—not the latest Patton-48 to be sure, for that newest medium's flow from the tank arsenals is at a moderate pace, but at least something much better than the older type, and proportionately stimulating to the troops. The older tanks, as replaced, go to reconditioning units and thereafter presumably will be turned over to Allies who will find the reconditioned Pershing much better than their own types, and who will be benefited thereby.

USS Pennsylvania Reunion

A reunion of officers and men who have served in the USS Pennsylvania will be planned by committees to be set up at an organizational meeting in Washington, D. C., on 24 September. The meeting will be held in Room 4E422, The Pentagon, at 12 noon.

Those wishing to attend should contact Ralph J. Hopkins, 3362-B South Wakefield Street, Arlington, Va., for further information.

Formosa Troop Report Has Quick Denial

A REPORT from Formosa, quoting an unnamed American high official as saying this week that Chinese Nationalist troops would soon be fighting on the side of the Allies in Korea, was promptly denied in Washington by the State and Defense Departments. The substance of the report attributed to the official was that two Chinese divisions would be sent to Korea from Formosa after the Presidential election next November, irrespective of the outcome, to give the Chinese soldiers essential combat experience, and to raise the morale of the Chinese Nationalist Army now in training in Formosa.

American diplomatic and military officials in Washington have always strongly opposed complicating the Korean conflict for the doubtful advantage of adding Chinese Nationalists to United Nations forces. Such an action might conceivably result in extending and prolonging the war, and would likely end whatever slender chance there might be for successful termination of the current truce negotiations. Obviously, the anonymous American official in Formosa either spoke out of turn, or was misquoted.

Another report of doubtful authenticity, attributed to London intelligence sources, which gained some currency this week, was to the effect that Chinese Reds now in Moscow have told Soviet leaders that in order to continue the Korean war they must have a great deal more military aid from Russia. Specifically mentioned among the required items of armament, according to the report, were jet planes, tanks, artillery, and weapons and ammunition of all types, as well as large quantities of industrial equipment for war plants. Most informed observers regard with skepticism this purported substance of Chinese demands. They think the report is highly conjectural, and based only on what may appear to be the logic of the situation, rather than on any verified version of the details of current Moscow discussions between the two Red allies.

THERE WERE NO NEW DEVELOPMENTS this week in the armament negotiations, as the truce conference was in recess most of the week, and there was no expectation of any break in the deadlock, at least until after conclusion of the current Moscow meeting of Red Chinese and Soviet political and military leaders. It was reported in London that England had suggested to the United States a new approach to the truce discussions. However, Mr. Anthony Eden, British foreign minister, said that there was a continuous exchange of ideas on the subject between the Allies, and gave no indication that any important development was in sight. At the same time he made it clear that England gave complete support to the American position that there should be no forced repatriation of Red prisoners, the principal point of difference between the United Nations and the Communist delegations at the Panmunjom conference. The Mexican Government has suggested that captive Reds who do not want to return to Communist control be permitted to go to any neutral country of their selection.

Russia this week failed to secure admission to the United Nations of five satellite countries by the device of bracketing them with a number of non-Communist countries whose applications for membership were previously vetoed by the Soviet Union. The Red blanket proposal was decisively rejected by the Security Council. Of the eleven members of the Council only Russia and Pakistan voted for the Soviet proposal, though several other countries abstained. Voting against Russia were the United States, Brazil, Greece, Nationalist China, and The Netherlands, while Great Britain, France, Chile, and Turkey abstained. The five Soviet proteges whose admission was sought were Albania, Bulgaria, Hungary, Outer Mongolia, and Romania. Nine others included in the Red proposal were Austria, Ceylon, Finland, Ireland, Italy, Jordan, Libya, Nepal and Portugal. Admission of all of these non-Communist states, except Libya, had been previously vetoed by Russia, and Soviet Ambassador Malik made it clear that the Russian veto would block admission of Libya, if separate consideration was given to that country.

GENERAL MOHAMMED NAGUIB, Egyptian strong man, in a surprise coup, seized political as well as military control of the country by accepting the resignation of Premier Aly Maher, and assuming that office for himself. General Naguib also tightened his grip on Egypt by arresting 47 political leaders, including two cousins of former King Farouk, two uncles of former Queen Narriman, and two former prime ministers. Naguib, who last July deposed King Farouk in a swift and highly successful, bloodless military coup, becomes the seventh premier of Egypt since January. It was said that he removed Maher as premier because of his cautious policy in carrying out the Army's program of economic reforms and of cleaning up political corruption. Naguib appointed a new cabinet, which immediately made him governor-general of Egypt under martial law, which, in effect, makes him military dictator of the country. The new premier is generally regarded as a moderate in international policy, and he has expressed his admiration and friendliness toward the United States, evincing considerable interest in this country's Point Four program for aid to underdeveloped countries. However, his new cabinet contains six members of the anti-British Nationalist party, and a member of the militant Moslem Brotherhood party. The new cabinet issued a decree controlling political parties, and another limiting land ownership by an individual to a maximum of 200 acres, thus paving the way for breaking up large estates, and redistributing the land to impoverished tenants.

PRIME MINISTER MOHAMMED MOSSADEGH of Iran this week not only re-emphasized his rejection of the Truman-Churchill compromise for settling the Iranian-British oil controversy, but branded it as the worst proposal yet suggested during the long dispute. He refused to agree to let the World Court fix the compensation for the seized British oil properties, indicating that the settlement should be made by Iranian courts. He also demanded back royalties at increased rates for oil previously marketed by the British. Despite the intransigent tone of the Mossadeh statement some observers professed to see in it some opening for resumption of direct negotiations. Mossadeh has summoned from Germany, Hjalmer Schacht, economic genius of the Hitler regime, to serve as financial adviser, with a view to developing a balanced Iranian economy, even without oil revenue. The task of saving the country from bankruptcy under such circumstances will prove difficult, if not impossible.

SERVICE NEWS AND GOSSIP

Cost-of-Living Pay Adjustment—Following earlier declarations by officials of unions representing Federal civilian employees stressing the need for a new cost-of-living pay increase, Chairman Robert Ramspeck of the Civil Service Commission said this week that Congress next year should give "serious consideration" to this matter. It can be expected that the statement of this important Government official, made before the Detroit convention of the National Federation of Federal Employees, will be repeated before appropriate Congressional groups early next year.

Another Government official who addressed the Detroit convention was Senator Olin D. Johnston (D-S. C.), who is chairman of the Civil Service Committee. He said a pay increase "is required by every realistic yardstick," and proposed "prompt action toward an increase in Federal salaries."

It is recalled that it was Chairman Ramspeck who played the key role in obtaining the approximate 10 per cent cost-of-living pay boost for civilian employees last year. This was retroactive to 1 July 1951. Obviously, a strong case is going to be made for a new look at pay scales for the Government's civilian employees when Congress reconvenes in January, with union spokesmen and Chairman Ramspeck of the Civil Service Commission leading the campaign.

Meantime, at the Pentagon there has been official silence on the matter of a pay adjustment for those in uniform, since first advocated by Assistant Secretary of Defense Anna M. Rosenberg upon her return from an inspection trip to Europe last month. It is to be hoped that other Defense officials will speak forth on this problem. If nothing else were accomplished, men and women in the Armed Forces would at least have the assurance that their representatives in Washington are seeking to safeguard living standards of military personnel and their families.

The likelihood is that if and when other Armed Forces leaders join Mrs. Rosenberg in seeking pay relief for those in Service, the approach will not be so strongly on the aspect of a pay raise as on the necessity for an adjustment to compensate for the "half-strength" bill which became effective on 1 May.

This measure gave military personnel an average cost-of-living pay increase of about 5 per cent, less than half the amount of the increase in living costs since passage of the Career Compensation Act in October 1949. In view of this fact and in view of the steadily rising cost-of-living, Pentagon authorities will be able to make a strong presentation in behalf of a pay adjustment, which would at least restore the 5 per cent cut which Congress imposed on the cost-of-living pay raise bill sent to Capitol Hill a year ago next month.

There is little doubt that a proposal for this pay adjustment would gain influential support among Senators and Representatives, but it is apparent that prolonged silence from the Pentagon will not help the situation. Members of the Armed Services are mindful that tardiness in asking pay relief last year resulted in a 5 per cent increase instead of 10 per cent, effective 1 May 1952 instead of 1 July 1951.

The chances are that nothing more may be said by Pentagon leaders on the pay situation until after the elections. Then, however, the time will be appropriate for more explicit documentation of Assistant Secretary Rosenberg's statement that the cost-of-living increase voted for Service personnel was not adequate and that an upward adjustment is essential.

Marines to Europe—With the announced assignment this week of Maj. Gen. John T. Selden, USMC, to the staff of the Commander in Chief, of U. S. Forces in Europe, speculation again arose that Marine ground troops will soon be assigned to the European Theatre.

Shortly after the press release had been issued on General Selden, the Marine Corps disclosed that two women officers—Capt. Jeanette I. Sustad and 2d Lt. Sara F. McLamore—have been named also to serve on the staff of CincEur. Still earlier, Headquarters of the Supreme Allied Commander, Europe, has announced that two squadrons of Marine aviation are slated for transfer from the United States to Italy.

Although no official confirmation was forthcoming about the assignment of Marine ground troops to the European command, observers indicated that such a move may well be underway.

Bad Year for Commissions?—The feeling is growing among Pentagon observers that this election year is a difficult time to establish civilian commissions to study military problems. As THE JOURNAL went to press, there was yet no announcement from the Department of Defense regarding the composition of the 11-member Citizens' Advisory Committee to review manpower and equipment utilization by the Armed Services.

The formal directive has been made public (THE JOURNAL, 23 Aug.) but the membership of the Committee, which will include a retired general or flag officers from the Army, Navy, Air Force and Marine Corps, is not yet firm.

Nor has the Department of Defense yet been able to announce the membership of the Civilian Commission which is to study the problem of hazard and incentive pay.

In both cases, Congress has called for quick action.

When the Commissions are established, political factors are certain to have no bearing on the study of the complex problems involved. However, there is little question but what the selection of members is much more difficult than would be the case after the political campaigning is over.

Nonetheless, it must be expected that there will be an early announcement from the Pentagon on the composition of the manpower and pay commissions, for the Department is well aware of Congressional urging for speedy action.

In the meantime, preliminary staff work is being done, so that when the commissions are named, rapid progress can be made.

Labor Under Sec'y Given Command—Brig. Gen. Michael J. Galvin, USAR, Under Secretary of Labor, has assumed command of the 310th Logistical Command, one of the largest Army Reserve units of the Military District of Washington headquartered at Ft. Myer, Va. General Galvin, a reservist since 1926, served five years during World War II and is credited with 302 days of battle service in Europe, where as plans and operations officer of the 6th Armored Division, he participated in all major offensives of General George S. Patton's Third Army in France and Germany. General and Mrs. Galvin with their five children reside at 4900 Quebec St., N. W., Washington, D. C.

To Journal Readers

...The Def. Dept. has yet to solve the problem of how to allocate 1,500,000 strength limitation of READY RESERVE among all the Services. The ceiling, imposed over Pentagon opposition, has created a complex situation, which will be aggravated by release of thousands of draftees. * * * It's virtually certain Defense officials will ask REMEDIAL LEGISLATION early next year.

...Service personnel are in for plenty of bang-up FOOTBALL GAMES this year, a number of them slated for nation-wide telecasts. Some teams may rival the crack all-star squads of WWII. * * * Included among thousands of recent ROTC graduates now on active duty are many collegiate GRID STARS, many of them All-Americans. Campus-like enthusiasm is building up at military installations, particularly for upcoming inter-Service contests.

...From Tokyo comes a report of SPLENDID ACCOMMODATIONS enjoyed by the WAC battalion in Tokyo, with quarters in the six-floor Mitsubishi Main. * * * Facilities include a beauty parlor, date room, and practice rifle range.

...When it comes to stars, the Service with the largest number of chaplains has the fewest. The Army has about 1400 chaplains on active duty — only one of them a general officer, Maj. Gen. Ivan L. Bennett, Chief of Chaplains. The Air Force, with about 1000 chaplains, has two — Maj. Gen. Charles I. Carpenter, Chief, and Brig. Gen. Augustus F. Gearhard, Deputy. * * * The Navy has about 860 chaplains, two of them flag officers, Rear Adm. Stanton W. Salisbury, Chief, and Rear Adm. Thornton C. Miller, Inspector, with another officer, Captain Edward B. Harp, jr., Asst. for Planning, on the promotion list for rear admiral.

...AF bombardiers and navigators who wear EYE GLASSES won't have difficulty performing duties aloft. Each person is now being issued corrective eyepieces, ground to his prescription, which are affixed to bomb-sights and sextants. The need for wearing glasses on flying missions is eliminated.

...A report from Randolph AFB, Tex., discloses that officers in the B-29 crew training program who have knowledge of emergency war plans are not being sent overseas. * * * Reason is to make certain such information does not fall into enemy hands.

Stamp Honors Women—Women in the Service were honored this week by the issuance of a new three-cent stamp portraying four women in the uniforms of the Army, Navy, Air Force and Marine Corps. In colorful ceremonies at the White House on 11 Sept., Postmaster General Jesse Donaldson presented the first sheet of the new stamps to President Truman. The President, in turn, presented albums of the new stamps to the top service women: Capt. Joy Hancock, Director of the Waves; Col. Mary Halloran, Director of the WAC; Col. Mary Jo Shelley, Director of the WAF; Col. Katherine A. Towle, Director of the Women Marines; Col. Ruby Bryant, Chief of the Army Nurse Corps; Col. V. M. Zeller, Chief of the Air Force Nurse Corps; Capt. Winnie Gibson, Chief of Navy Nurses; Col. Nell Wickliffe, Chief of the Army Women's Medical Service Corps; and Col. Miriam E. Perry, Chief of the Air Force Women's Medical Service Corps.

Attending the presentation were Secretary of Defense Robert A. Lovett, Assistant Secretary of Defense Anna Rosenberg, Secretary of the Army Frank Pace, and Under Secretary of the Navy Francis P. Whitehair.

Secretary Lovett said, "Speaking for the men of the military services, we are very proud of the tribute being paid today to our women in uniform." President Truman commented that there are now 46,000 women in uniform, filling 450 jobs, and that "the Services would have a hard time operating without them."

The new stamp went on sale in Washington this week and will be available throughout the country within the next few days.

Good News At Fairchild AFB—Reopening of the maternity ward at the Fairchild AFB, Wash., hospital has been made possible, with new funds authorized for necessary construction and additional personnel. Closing of the maternity ward was reported in THE JOURNAL of 16 Aug.

THE REMINGTON ELECTRI-CONOMY

Here's the really fast way to turn out service records, requisitions, reports, correspondence—in fact all your service typing.

Since electricity does the work—the Electri-conomy spaces automatically, and returns the carriage automatically! As a result typists' fingers fly faster, make fewer errors and typing output jumps up as much as 50%! What's more you save on multi-copy typing. The Electri-conomy's power-driven strokes produce as many as 20 sharp, clear, easy-to-read carbons ...all at a single typing.

So, if you have a typing problem that calls for speed, neatness and accuracy—investigate the famous Remington Electri-conomy. It solves that problem fast!

FREE! For a revealing demonstration of the Electri-conomy right in your own office or free literature "Take a Letter" (RE8499), phone your local Remington Rand man or write Remington Rand, Room 2380, 315 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, N. Y.

Army Cols. To Get Notice.

AF Statement Seen Near

Army officials were preparing late this week to send out individual notices to each of the approximately 1,000 permanent colonels who face possible statutory retirement in 1953 and 1954. Letters will go out immediately after Secretary of the Army Frank Pace, Jr., approves the recommendations of the board of retired general officers.

Meantime, a Department of Defense official acknowledged that the Air Force has not yet received approval for its recommendations regarding the permanent colonels, but that a decision was expected momentarily.

The belief is that the Air Force is not going to retain any of the 50 permanent colonels who will have 30 years' service and five years in grade by 30 June 1953. The fact is a report that these officers already have received notice of this decision has gone unchallenged.

The Department of Defense delay in acting upon the Air Force plans was not explained.

The Army is expected to retain about 60 per cent of the permanent colonels (Please turn to Page 61) makes it possible to attain current goals at a relatively early date.

Considerable Congressional criticism has been leveled at the Department for failure to standardize designs, particularly in aircraft, and to go immediately into mass production of approved types. The Department feels that any freeze in design would inevitably halt progress. It insists that new and better equipment may be continually produced, only if changes and improvements are adopted as they are developed, even though this policy may slow production. Such a program is necessary to prevent accumulation of large inventories of obsolescent equipment.

Current rates of military production are giving Defense Department officials considerable satisfaction. Deliveries this year are expected in such volume that defense estimates for the Fiscal Year 1954, now in preparation, will take into consideration the fact that initial requirements of many items will have been met, and that future needs will be estimated on a continuing sustaining and maintenance basis. This will not apply to many types of equipment, such as airplanes and warships, where there is a long lead time, and quantity deliveries cannot be made before a year or two after procurement contracts have been awarded.

Referring to the general industrial mobilization of a country Mr. Winston Churchill said that during the first year nothing is produced, during the second year there is a trickle of production, and during the third year a flood. This comment is not wholly applicable to recent and current military production in this country. During the first year after the start of the Korean War there was a trickle of deliveries of military items, during the second year much more than a trickle, and during the third somewhat less than a flood is expected.

Secretary Lovett recently pointed out that the current rate of deliveries of hard good, including such items as guns, tanks, motor vehicles, ammunition, airplanes, and ships, is 6.7 times the rate in 1950, and 2.2 times that of last year. In aircraft the rate is nearly four times that of 1950, and 2.7 times that of 1951. Three times as many planes are now assigned to combat units of the Air Force as was the case at the beginning of the Korean War. Plane inventories do not entirely reflect this increase, as much obsolete equipment has been washed out.

The current rate of deliveries of ships is three and one-half times that of 1950, and 1.7 times that of 1951. In combat tanks the current rate is more than 12 times that of 1950, and nearly seven times that of last year. In non-combat vehicles, where deliveries are now overtaking requirements, the rate is nearly 12 times that of 1950, and slightly less than twice that of last year. Ammunition is being furnished at 14.4 times the rate of 1950, and more than five times that of 1951.

Lack of production equipment, such as machine tools, formed an early barrier to industrial expansion. This problem has now been largely solved. Nearly 50 times as much of such equipment was available this year as could be secured in 1950, and last year's deliveries have been more than doubled this year. Initial supplies and stockages of clothing and equipment, and subsistence for the 3.7 million men in the Armed Services have been practically completed, and deliveries are now made on a sustaining basis. Construction, which was nearly 19 times as great this year as in 1950, and four times as great as last year, is nearing completion.

Industrial mobilization was delayed by the long steel strike, but the crippling effects of this work stoppage were not as serious a blow to National Defense as had been feared by the Government. Prompt resumption of work at more than rated capacity, immediately after the strike settlement, is rapidly making up the deficit incurred, and most previously anticipated goals will be met. Indeed, there is now some concern as to the economic effect on the country of a leveling off of military production, as defense requirements are largely met, with a consequent reduction in Federal expenditures for such purposes.

An important result of unification under the Defense Department has been a greater consolidation of procurement functions. The Department has not gone far enough in this field to meet demands of Congressional critics, but has made important progress.

The Navy now buys all paint, hand tools, and coal; the Army procures non-perishable food, lumber, and automotive vehicles; the Air Force buys all photographic equipment. A joint agency buys all medical supplies required by the Services; another purchases all petroleum products; and a third procures all clothing. In this and other ways competitive buying is largely eliminated, with a resultant large saving in military costs.

While there is still a great degree of independent administration in each of the Armed Forces, there appears to be a trend toward greater centralization of authority in the Secretary of Defense. Unification of command responsibility has been largely accomplished overseas, but has not been established in this country. Some experimental steps in this direction have been taken, but no drastic change in this regard is presently in prospect, though in the event of a major war unified continental defense commands would undoubtedly be organized.

yard at Chinnampo, and flew close support missions at the front line. They also pounded a supply center at Yangdok in north central Korea.

Night-flying B-26 light bombers attacked supply-targets south of Kyomipo, and destroyed more than 200 trucks as they patrolled highways south of Sinmak and Sariwon. They also flew numerous close support sorties. In an unusual daylight attack, light bombers hit a tungsten mine southeast of Yangdok. A cloud cover prevented complete evaluation of the damage, but two secondary explosions were observed, and at least three buildings were destroyed or damaged.

FEAF Operations Summary

In its weekly summary of operations for the week ending 5 September the Far East Air Force announced that during that period 4,555 effective sorties were flown by its planes, and those of attached units. During that week 19 enemy MIGs were destroyed in air combat, one was probably destroyed, and 17 were damaged. In addition claims of one enemy plane shot down, one probably destroyed, and two damaged are being evaluated.

In the same period two American F-86 Sabre Jets were lost in air combat, the first since 1 August, and two F-86s, one F-80, one F-84, and one Marine AU-6 were lost to other causes.

Since the start of the war enemy plane losses were estimated at 575 destroyed, 144 probably destroyed, and 639 damaged, for a total of 1,358, nearly all in air combat. During the war the Far East Air Force and attached units have lost 764 planes, 85 in combat, 566 to enemy ground fire, and 113 to other causes.

From the beginning of the war to date the Far East Air Force and attached units have flown 563,005 sorties, and have destroyed 56,760 enemy vehicles, 8,450 rail cars, 763 bridges, 1,260 tanks and 917 tunnels. It is estimated that they have inflicted 177,215 casualties on Red troops. The losses and damage claims covered by this summary do not include operations of carrier-based planes.

Casualty Report

The Department of Defense this week announced that American battle casualties since the start of the war, based on notifications of next of kin through 5 September, now total 117,237. Included are 20,600 killed in action and died of wounds, 86,122 wounded in action, including 1,927 who later died; and 12,644 missing in action, including 202 who died, 1,389 returned to military control, and 1,613 captured, leaving 9,440 currently missing.

Of the total casualties 93,581 were sustained by the Army, 1,552 by the Navy, 20,845 by the Marine Corps, and 1,259 by the Air Force.

The 3499th Mobile Training Group is located at Chanute AFB. This group is charged with the mission of providing transition and refresher technical training for technically qualified aircraft maintenance personnel, aircraft components personnel and aircrew personnel through the use of the Mobile Training Detachments.

A Mobile Training Detachment consists of a team of qualified instructor specialists along with the necessary training aids and supporting equipment. The training aids include representations of major aircraft components and related airborne equipment of a specific type of aircraft. At the present time some 62 operational Mobile Training Detachments instruct on 27 different types of aircraft. This mission is a reversal of the normal Air Training Command function in that the classroom is brought to the student rather than the student brought to the classroom.

Francis E. Warren AFB, Cheyenne, Wyo., conducts formal training courses in Supply, Vehicle Maintenance, Transportation, Administration, Communications, Utilities, Education, and Wire Maintenance.

Keesler AFB at Biloxi, Miss., conducts formal and special training courses in Radar and Radio Maintenance, Aircraft Control and Warning, Communications Operations, Armament System Maintenance, and Electronics Officer Specialties.

Lowry AFB, Denver, Colo., conducts formal training courses in Armament Systems, Weapons and Munitions, Personnel, Transportation, Photography, Intelligence, Firefighting, Statistical and Machine Accounting, Budgeting, Accounting and Disbursing, Flexible Gunnery Training and Guided Missile Guidance.

Scott AFB, Belleville, Ill., conducts formal training courses in Radio Maintenance, Communications Operations, and Cryptography.

Sheppard AFB, Wichita Falls, Tex., conducts formal training courses in conventional airplane and engine maintenance.

Other Activities Told

In addition to the training outlined above, Technical Training Air Force prepares USAF extension courses and provides On-the-Job training package material and advisory service for other Air Force agencies as required. All bases participate in the Reserve Training Program, and five bases participated in the summer training program for Air Force ROTC students.

The primary consideration of this vast training establishment is the quality of the end product—the graduates.

The basic airman, whose first glimpse of the Air Force is at one of the three indoctrination centers, undergoes a series of aptitude tests to determine in which career area he may best serve the needs of the Air Force and, at the same time, succeed as an individual.

After completing the series of aptitude tests and recording information on his background and experiences, each basic airman is interviewed by a trained classification specialist. As a result of this interview, the airman is recommended either for immediate assignment to an operating organization or assigned to a technical school for training in a specialty for which he is best qualified.

Over 200 Courses

The majority of basic airmen go immediately from basic military training into a course at one of the Technical Training Air Force's seven technical schools. Eventually, almost all airmen attend one or more of the 172 formal courses or 58 special training courses provided at Technical Training Air Force bases or at factories producing Air Force materiel.

The military training of the airman does not cease with his completion of basic military course at the indoctrination training bases. It is continued throughout his technical training through the medium of daily formation and ceremonies in marching to and from the technical training areas, in the classroom, and during the squadron duty period which is allocated two of the eight duty hours per day.

Quality control over this geographically wide-spread, and highly diversified, instruction requires intense effort at all echelons within the Command. This control is exercised through the instructor training and instructor supervisor training courses conducted at all bases.

While some of the instructors in a technical course are carefully selected recent graduates of that course, most of the instructors have previously had field experience at Air Force bases in the United States or overseas. They are skilled technicians and mechanics. The instructor training program is aimed toward giving this skilled mechanic or technician the "tools" he will need as an instructor. These "tools" include knowing how to train a student, the methods and techniques that must be used in imparting to the student the knowledge he must have, and developing in the student those skills he must master before assignment to an Air Force team.

Quality Control

Quality control is exercised through small classes. Here each student receives the maximum of individual attention. Each student works with the identical equipment and under conditions which either are identical to or closely resemble those he will encounter in his career assignment. This plan for instruction is flexible enough to allow for normal differences among students. The student's initiative is encouraged. His development from a basic airman to an apprentice level airman is carefully planned and accomplished through the guidance of an instructor who realizes the importance of the student's physical participation during the training period.

Emphasis is placed on the employment of appropriate training aids and equipment throughout all courses of instruction. The students learn to do the job for which they are being trained by actually performing that job under conditions which are as realistic as they can be made. Actual equipment employed in field operations are used for training purposes throughout the training program in order that the students can learn their specialties with maximum efficiency. Supplementary training aids of all types are employed in the situations to which they are appropriate in order to expedite the learning process and produce the highly trained specialists who are essential to the combat effectiveness of the United States Air Force.

Backing up the instructors are training analysis and development personnel, who constantly search for improvements in methods and techniques of instruction, training aids, curriculum, and evaluation procedures. They also maintain constant contact with other United States Air Force units at home and overseas in a never-ending effort to provide the best graduate possible within the limitations of time, manpower, equipment and money.

While the course material must be aimed directly at the job descriptions, as set forth in Air Force Regulations, the graduates must be capable of performing duties in Strategic Air Command, Tactical Air Command, Air Defense Command, or foreign theaters immediately upon completion of training. In its basic technical courses, Technical Training Air Force strives to produce an apprentice airman that the unit to which he is ultimately assigned can develop into a senior skill level technician, an effective member of that particular team, and a soldierly airman.

Another aspect in the constant struggle for quality, particularly in the top level skills, is a requirement for keeping abreast of the changes of aircraft and associated equipment. This requires constant contact with Air Materiel Command and the manufacturers. Squadrons which are about to receive the latest model aircraft demand personnel capable of maintaining those aircraft at the same time. Technical Training Air Force strives through its factory courses, mobile training detachments, and specialized formal courses, to keep the technical skill of the Air Force abreast of the latest developments in aircraft and equipment.

Must Insure Training Balance

Of prime importance to United States Air Force is the requirement for the requisite number of personnel trained in the proper skills. Technical Training Air Force must gear its training establishment to provide specific numbers of airplane and engine mechanics, power plant mechanics, radar mechanics, and armament specialists as required throughout the Air Force, by a given date. To over-produce one critical specialty and under-produce in another is to create an unbalance in manning which detracts from the operational capability of the units and increases administrative and morale problems.

Flexibility of facilities, equipment, and personnel are required, along with constant surveillance of the program, to insure quantitative and qualitative production on time. In the calendar year 1952, Technical Training Air Force will produce more than 170,000 graduates from its formal technical training courses, in addition to the training conducted in basic military courses.

Three Shifts

Since the advent of the Korean hostilities, Technical Training Air Force schools have worked three shifts per day, six days per week to provide personnel with the "know-how" for duty on air fields in Korea, Japan, Alaska, and Europe. Even there, mobile training detachments provide the latest up-to-the-minute transition training on new operational types of aircraft.

U. S. Coast Guard

THE 1952 football season at the Coast Guard Academy opens on 27 Sept. at New London, Conn., against Norwich and will end on 8 Nov. at New London against Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute.

Other games are Colby, 4 Oct., Waterville, Me.; Wesleyan, 11 Oct., New London; Amherst, 18 Oct., Amherst, Mass.; Worcester, 25 Oct., Worcester, Mass.; and Trinity, 1 Nov., Hartford, Conn.

From New London, Coach Nitcham and officer-in-charge Bob Waldron, who coaches the ends, report that graduation and separations will give the Academy gridders a difficult time in matching last year's record, when the team was undefeated.

Others who are assisting in the coaching are Lt. Bill Hammer and Beryl Follet, with a junior varsity to be coached by Lt. (jg) Joe Dorsky if he is able to find enough time from his teaching job in match.

The following football prospectus was made available to THE JOURNAL by Coast Guard grid enthusiasts:

Chuck Hahn, veteran right end, and Dwight Ramsey, handicapped by injury last year, are the most likely end prospects defensively. Darrell Babcock and Dan Olson, up from the jayvee squad, appear to have the inside track on the defensive tackle positions. To strengthen the guard positions, Roger Madison and Chuck Stadlander have been moved from offensive berths. With Archer gone and an extra offensive end, Dick Lewis, available, and to assure us of an experienced competitor at that all-important backer-up position, Lewis will be tried there along with Curran, who played some at fullback with the jayvees. Guy Mizell and Billy Russell will share offensive and defensive duties at the fullback position with Mazell carrying the greater part of the defensive load but still to be used for his prowess as a runner off and on. Bobby Hollingsworth, the only other fourth class cadet to make the starting units last year, will again hold forth at safety. In recognition of certain of their past experiences with football and for the fine defensive work done last year in basketball, Ross Day and Gene Hammerquist were called out for football and at the present writing will, along with Dick Nielsen, a converted guard, work at the defensive half-back positions. Vic Robillard at guard and Henry Suski at fullback are two others who loom as fairly good defensive potentials.

On offense, Dave Stryfeler and Mike Boggs have the edge on the end positions: Bill Tillo and George Seaman the tackle posts; and Joe Kelly and John Moseley the guard spots. At center, Ed Daniels, also our place-kicker, will again hold forth, while Billy Reilly will again direct the team activities and do most of the passing. The same two little but driving halfbacks, Captain Nat Spadafora and Rick Cueroni, will fill those berths and Bill Russell and Guy Mizell will alternate at fullback. Dick Lewis will be used some as an alternate end along with working at the center slot unless an especially fine fourth class candidate appears on the scene. Also, contingent on what material the fourth class offers, will be the return possibility of Roger Madison to an offensive guard position; Darrell Babcock to an offensive tackle slot; and Bill Russell to a defensive halfback where he played last year.

Colonels Get Notice

who face retirement in 1953 and 1954. Unless there is a change in plans, the list of colonels to be retained will be made available for publication.

As soon as Secretary Pace gives his approval to recommendations made by a board, which was headed by General Wade H. Haislip, USA-Ret., the Army will immediately notify each officer whether he is to be retained or retired.

Defense Directive

cedures and instructions. These implementing directives will be issued at a pace which will permit of adequate preparation for, and orderly execution of, the actions prescribed by such directives, the Pentagon said.

An explanation of the action taken by Mr. Lovett was made this week by Vice Chairman John C. Houston, Jr., of the Munitions Board. Speaking on the "Time for Defense" program over the American Broadcasting Company network, Mr. Houston said:

"The Secretary of Defense, Mr. Lovett, has just taken another major step to weld the three military departments into a more efficient organization for the defense of our country. How was this done? By the issuance to the military services of a far-reaching order based on an additional grant of authority given to the Secretary of Defense in the closing days of the last Congress. This act of Congress says, in effect, that no money appropriated for the three military departments may be spent except in accordance with the directives issued by the Secretary of Defense. In the past, the Secretary of Defense has had only limited control over the expenditure of funds after they had been appropriated by Congress for the use of the individual services. He has therefore been in the position of being held responsible for getting the maximum amount of security for each dollar spent without having all the authority necessary to do it.

"Under this new directive, the military departments must follow sound business practices in buying, shipping, storing, and maintaining the billions of dollars worth of materials they require. The elimination of duplication is the theme that runs through the entire directive. For example, it prohibits the establishment by any military department of commercial type facilities such as warehouses, bakeries, laundries, etc., where adequate private facilities exist to meet the needs of the department at reasonable prices. Also, it will now be impossible for duplicate motor repair shops, for instance, to be set up in the same area, one serving the Army and one the Navy, where one could take care of the repair needs of both services.

"Many business organizations dealing with the Department of Defense have complained of duplicate inspections of the very same material at the very same plant by two or more military departments. They have justly termed it an unbusinesslike practice. The new directive will be an additional aid in eliminating that type of duplication.

"It further recognizes the substantial progress which has been made in carrying out a uniform cataloging and standardization program within the Department of Defense. By developing and using single specifications for various categories of items the number of sizes, kinds and types of generally similar items will be reduced.

"The burden remains on the military departments to carry out these principles of economy. But the Secretary of Defense and his responsible officers will supervise and examine their actions to see that conformity has been achieved. In this respect, the Munitions Board will have a major responsibility.

"It must be remembered, of course, that unification of the Armed Services has only been in effect for a relatively short time. It has manifestly been impossible in that short time to have eliminated all the ancient competitive practices, the overlapping and duplicating of functions which were often present in the makeup of individual, autonomous services. The art of economy, can only be learned by doing. This new directive of the Secretary of Defense is designed to bring the sound business principles of private enterprise into governmental practice. It sets up a comprehensive guide to economy and efficiency for the entire military establishment. It is a tremendous far-sighted task which cannot be accomplished overnight. It will take time, but it will be done, and as each action is taken, it will save the taxpayer's money while it guards his security with even greater effectiveness."

Keep up with your friends by reading the Army Navy Air Force Journal each week.

MP Officer For Tech. Services

The Office of the Provost Marshal General will transfer to the Chiefs of Technical Services seven military police officers, on 1 Oct., to serve as provost marshals, thus implementing the Technical Service Provost Marshal Program.

The program will provide each technical service with its own law enforcement and physical security agency. A provost marshal will be assigned to the staff of each Chief of Technical Service to be responsible for physical security; prevention, detection and investigation of criminal acts at Class II installations commanded by Chiefs of Technical Services. The scope of operation of the provost marshal will be as widespread or as restricted as the Chief of Technical Service directs. It follows that the service with the greatest number of installations and activities will use a proportionately larger number of military police personnel. Provost marshals assigned to activities in the field will have the same relative duties as a post provost marshal, while the provost marshal assigned to the Office of the Chief of Technical Service may be likened to his counterpart on a continental Army staff.

Assigned as Technical Service Provost Marshals are: Lt. Col. Fred G. Steiner, Office of the Surgeon General; Lt. Col. W. F. Farrell, Office of the Chief of Transportation; Lt. Col. Howard C. Bush, Office of the Quartermaster General; Col. Robert W. Reed, Office of the Chief of Engineers; Col. Victor W. Phelps, Office of the Chief Signal Officer; Col. Clarence W. Read, Office of the Chief of Ordnance; Lt. Col. Carl E. Grimsley, Office of the Chief Chemical Officer.

McDonnell Aircraft Corporation of St. Louis, Mo., has concluded production, on schedule, of the final F2H-2P reconnaissance Banshee for the Navy.

A familiarization flight in the final photo-Banshee was made by Comdr. Charles H. S. Murphy, the Navy's new Bureau of Aeronautics representative at McDonnell. It was the first time that he had flown a jet.

Deliveries of the F2H-2P, the first jet carrier-based photographic airplane ever developed, began more than a year ago. The number produced and the dollar value of the production contract have not been disclosed because of security requirements.

Production work on the latest model in the Banshee series, the F2H-3 larger Banshee, is continuing at the McDonnell plant. In addition to this contract, McDonnell also has a production order for a single-jet Navy fighter, the swept-wing F3H-1 Demon; an Air Force order calling for production engineering and tooling for the manufacture of a long-range, twin-jet fighter, and experimental contracts for airplanes, helicopters and guided missiles from both the Navy and the Air Force which will maintain the firm's current backlog level of more than $300,000,000.

Based on the Navy's famed F2H-2 Banshee fighter, the F2H-2P is in the 600-mile-an-hour class and has completed photographic missions ranging in altitude from 50 feet to ten miles. Principal difference from the standard F2H-2 Banshee is the photo airplane's camera nose. The cameras, remotely controlled by the pilot, can be aimed through the windows, rotating from horizon to horizon while the airplane is in flight.

Millions Saved, Says AIA

Millions of tax dollars are being saved annually through the teamwork of the Air Force, Navy and Industry in standardizing aircraft engine and propeller "hardware" parts, the Aircraft Industries Association reports.

In a booklet entitled "Mr. Taxpayer Gets A Break," the AIA points out that a typical engine bolt and nut, costing $2.63 before standardization, are now manufactured for a dollar. Quantity usage of these items alone will result in savings of an estimated million dollars this year.

Savings effected through standardization have already lowered the cost of aircraft being delivered to the military services and the standardization program is continuing toward even greater manufacturing efficiency and cost savings, the AIA says.

The Air Force-Navy-Industry (ANI) program has replaced thousands of individual company-manufactured parts with relatively few ANI standard designs, substantially reducing the variety of airplane engines and propeller parts and the quantities of these items used each year. Builders and buyers of powerplants and propellers for military aircraft will use about 78 million fewer "hardware" parts in 1952 as a result of the ANI standards program.

In the past four years, the ANI team completed 251 designs which standardized 19,410 hardware parts previously made and stocked under the specifications of twelve individual companies. This year, over 29 million parts manufactured under ANI standards will be procured for the aircraft engine and propeller program.

USMC Promotion Plans

second lieutenants will be aviators.

The Integration board has already announced its selections for the grades of colonel, lieutenant colonel, major and captain. This week Headquarters said "special consideration" is being given to officers who have graduated from an accredited law school or who hold membership in the bar. This is being done because of an "urgent need for lawyers in the Marine Corps."

Temp. Promotion Policy

In outlining its reasons for the new over-all temporary promotion policy which was approved by President Truman in June, Headquarters said the present requirements of the Corps "may be transitory" and not reflect the "long-range permanent needs of the service."

All promotions approved during the past two months, as well as those to be made in the future, are for the duration of the present emergency only, plus a maximum of six months after the emergency is terminated. Headquarters emphasized, however, that officers considered by a promotion board under the new temporary policy will not be regarded as having failed of selection (insofar as voluntary retirement or separation is concerned) if they are not recommended by the board.

Partial Text

A partial text of the bulletin outlining the effects of the temporary promotion plan follows:

"On 24 June 1952, the President prescribed regulations for the temporary appointment and promotion of Marine Corps officers pursuant to the Temporary Promotion Act of 1941, the law under which such promotions were effected during World War II. On the same date, by Executive Order, the President suspended those provisions of the Officer Personnel Act of 1947 relating to the distribution in grades, promotion by selection, temporary promotion, and discharge on second failure of selection for promotion, of Marine officers in all grades. This action followed similar executive action taken in 1951 with respect to Marine officers serving in grades below major.

"Under the Temporary Promotion Act of 1941, temporary promotions will be made in numbers required to meet the needs of the service, while promotions pursuant to the Officer Personnel Act of 1947 were based on years of service in grade, total commissioned service, and equality of opportunity for promotion. The actual procedures for implementation of promotions under the President's Regulations of 24 June 1952 closely parallel those prescribed by the Officer Personnel Act. Temporary promotion to grades above first lieutenant will result from recommendations of promotion boards convened by the Secretary of the Navy. However, instead of recommending those officers considered 'best fitted' within a prescribed promotion zone, such promotion board will now recommend for temporary promotion the most senior of those officers under consideration who are 'fully qualified' to perform all duties appropriate to the next higher grade, in numbers prescribed by the board's precept and without a 'zone' being stipulated.

"The President's action was considered necessary because of the fact that present promotions are being effected to fill what may be transitory needs of the Marine Corps occasioned by the current international situation, rather than long-range permanent needs of the service. Officers promoted under the Temporary Promotion Act of 1941 may be continued in their temporary status during such period as the President may determine, but not longer than six months after the termination of the present national emergency, while promotions effected pursuant to the Officer Personnel Act contemplate service in grade to which promoted beyond the termination of the emergency, and qualify the individual for permanent promotion on the active list of the regular Marine Corps. It must be emphasized that personnel considered by a promotion board under the Act of 1941, but not recommended for selection, will not be regarded as having failed of selection, insofar as involuntary retirement or separation is concerned."

Retain Colonel Reed

A board of five general officers has exonerated Col. Allen W. Reed of any responsibility for black market activities for which his wife was recently tried in Germany.

Colonel Reed went before the board at Washington, D. C., on 2 Sept. It was convened to determine the extent, if any, of Colonel Reed's knowledge of or complicity in his wife's alleged actions, and whether he should be retained on active duty.

The board decided after an exhaustive consideration of all the records and evidence presented that there was neither knowledge nor complicity on the part of Colonel Reed and, accordingly, that he should be retained on active duty.

This appeal for the blood so urgently needed by our military forces was made to the general public in recent weeks through the pages of The Saturday Evening Post, Time and Newsweek.

Lifeline

This is where it goes. To this scorched and battered hole it brings the miraculous, life-giving drops that rob death of one more mother's son.

It started — where? In a New England mill town, perhaps. Or a port city on the Gulf. Or a village deep in the midwestern prairie. He will never know — this boy whose life it saves.

But he will know forever that somewhere in the great heartland of America someone thought of him, and gave that he might live.

Now...who will tell him the other side of the story? Would you care to tell this boy and his comrades their life line is running dry?

The fact is, today's needs are many times greater than available reserves — reserves which must keep pace with the growing strength of our armed forces if the appeal for blood is to be met adequately. It's as plain as that.

Science and medicine perform miracles...but miracles cease when charity fails.

No longer is this a job for the thoughtful few. It is a job now for every single one of us. Get in touch with your local chapter of the Red Cross now. Give your share...now.

If you will do that, together, with the help of God, we can keep the life line going.
